Community Conversations: Helping Our Community Thrive

Facilitator-guided Circle

What are Community Conversations?

Community Conversations seek to bring diverse people together for honest dialogue on timely issues to promote understanding. In a democracy, successful resolution of concerns and conflicts can be more fully achieved when people take an active part in looking for ways to respectfully work together to help our community thrive.

When do groups meet? Groups usually meet for about a total of seven or eight hours, either in two-hour sessions weekly or longer sessions over two to four weeks, to get to know each other and develop a comfort level for frank discussion of issues. At the end of the circle, people from multiple circles may gather for a voluntary action forum to plan specific steps they wish to take individually or collectively to make a positive difference. Conversations can provide great networking opportunities. Topics and timing of meetings can be tailored to fit your group's needs.

Who leads Community Conversations?

Each circle is led by two trained volunteer facilitators who help the group address issues using a discussion guide while remaining neutral throughout. Curriculum is obtained from: www.everyday-democracy.org
